

CACTUS THREE Presents

THE F WORD

In The F Word, director/writer Jed Weintrob put actors right in the middle of the crowds of demonstrators and police that filled Manhattan's streets during last summer's Republican convention. His media protagonist, a fed-up radio disc jockey whose station is being forced off the air because it can't pay its nearly $1 million in Federal Communications Commission-mandated indecency fines, decides to take his last show to the streets with a wireless mike and a portable transmitter. His meandering becomes an odyssey through Manhattan streets thronged with actual protesters, delegates and cops, as well as with a colorful assortment of actors in cameos, whose characters all uniquely express various ideological points of view.

The F Word is a shoe-string-budgeted indie film with a blockbuster-sized movie's 'cast of thousands,' but here, nearly all of the extras are courtesy of the GOP.
